KING CARLOS NOT TO MARRY.

Duke of Edinburgh's Daughter. Court society in Berlin has quite a nove morsel of gossip that, upon investigation proves to be well authenticated; in fact, as it has

The story says that the Duke of Edinburgh before consenting to give his daughter to the crown prince of Roumania in marriage forced King Carlos to sign a document obligating himself not to remarry in the case of the deat clause so that his daughter's ascension to the throne should not be obstructed by any post throne should not be obstructed by any possible later issue of the king.

Carlos reluctantly signed this strange document, as he considered it necessary to close the "marriage bargain" as speedily as possible, so as to forestall further complications. When the queen, Carmen Sylva, heard of this she would never to return to Bucharest. She was a provide the powers that he considered angry because the powers that be considered her no better than a dead woman. She refused to attend the marriage of Prince Ferdinand and wrote the latter she never wanted to hear from him again. She has since buried herself in the lonely castle of Neuwied, Ehenish Prus-sia, where her husband visited the other day without obtaining admission to his challenge.

The kaiser, who is the head of the Hohen zollern family, and to whom the King of Rou-mania is therefore responsible in all family matters, is said to have advised him to sign the mania to leave Carmen Sylva in the Neuwied, where she is out of the w chief.
It is said that the kaiser's priv
